To ensure the well-being of people and to maintain the value of a wooden floor, it is necessary to monitor and control a healthy living climate. This is reached at ca. 20°C and 50% relative humidity. Higher levels of relative humidity will cause the timber to swell, lower levels will cause the timber to shrink, opening up joints of varying sizes.

Simple devices such as hygrometers or thermometers enable these conditions to be monitored. By placing water containers on radiators or by using humidifiers in large rooms, it is possible to increase the humidity in a room.
